best! And I thought it better to express that before the opportunity passed," Myers said. "Sometimes life-altering opportunities like this are right in front of you, calling and waiting on your will to seize them."

Although Myers' focus will shift to franchise sales, he will maintain his position as managing partner of a business plan including a portfolio of My Place locations and ongoing development. Both excitement and confidence mount at My Place HQ as Kline prepares to transition a successful franchise partner into a development team member and co-worker.

"Eric's existing relationships with franchisees and My Place employees makes this a natural progression," Kline said. "The experience that he brings from decades of relationship building in addition to his development of the My Place product over the last few years not only makes him a qualified candidate, but rather, the best candidate."

It has been months in the making, but the thorough search to fill an additional seat in the My Place Franchise Development department has ended as a result of a few well-timed epiphanies. No one could be happier than My Place's lone godfather of franchise sales, Terry Kline.

"It was almost funny when we both had the epiphany," Kline said. "After interviewing many candidates to join me in facilitating My Place's accelerated growth, I found myself saying, 'I just need someone with the skill set of an Eric Myers on the team.'"
